Most trafficking cases fall apart because officers can't act on a hunch when the signs are there, due to the data they need being scattered across systems.

This eBook outlines a two-step approach:

1. Confirm instincts with connected data.
2. Collaborate across agencies to build the full picture.

With the right technology, officers can see repeat paths of travel, unusual dwell times, and connections across cases (in and out of your jurisdiction), which lead to insights that can turn a routine stop into a trafficking investigation.

In our free eBook, From Instinct to Evidence: Modern Approaches to Human Trafficking Investigations, you'll discover how agencies are putting this into practice across the country.
